US Stocks Rebound

United States

Stock Market

US stocks rebounded from early losses on Monday as markets shook off the selloff in precious metals that triggered higher margins in major exchanges ahead of key earnings results this week. The three S&P 500 and the Dow were 0.5% higher, while the Nasdaq 100 gained over 0.7%. Tech stocks led the rebound with Oracle adding 1.5% after outlining plans to raise $50 billion through debt and equity for more cloud infrastructure capacity. Additionally, Palantir gained 2% ahead of its earnings after the bell while AMD, Alphabet, and Amazon were firmly higher ahead of their results later this week. On the other hand, Nvidia fell around 2% after signaling its plan to invest $100 billion in OpenAI had stalled. Also, miners and energy producers sank due to the plunge in bullion, oil, and natural gas prices. Lastly, banks were muted amid a steeper yield curve, holding developments since Kevin Warsh, known for opposing a large Fed balance sheet, was nominated for Fed Chairman by President Trump.

Dollar Strengthens Further

United States | Currency

The dollar index climbed toward 97.7 on the first trading day of February, its highest level in more than a week, extending gains of over 0.7% from the previous session. The greenback rebounded after a losing January, as US President Donald Trump's nomination of Kevin Warsh as the next Fed chair injected fresh uncertainty into the outlook for monetary policy. Markets view Warsh as a more hawkish pick who would favour lower interest rates, albeit less aggressively than some other potential candidates. He is also expected to rein in the Fed's balance sheet, a move that typically supports the dollar by reducing liquidity in the financial system. The dollar also drew support from stronger-than-expected US data, with the ISM manufacturing PMI unexpectedly rising to its highest level since 2022 in January. The greenback strengthened against the Japanese yen and also gained against the Swiss franc, the Canadian dollar and the euro.

Gold Rout Shows Signs of Easing

Commodity

Gold prices fell about 4% to below $4,700 per ounce on the first trading day of February, after plunging as much as 10% during the Asian session and following a 9% tumble on Friday. Friday's rout was triggered by US President Trump's nomination of Kevin Warsh, widely viewed as a more hawkish choice, to lead the Fed, a move that boosted the dollar and weighed on the yellow metal. Profit-taking also set in after a relentless rally that had pushed gold to record highs. That advance was driven by strong central bank demand and the so-called "debasement trade," as investors rotated into physical assets from currencies and bonds amid concerns over rising government debt. Heightened geopolitical and economic uncertainty, along with worries about the Fed's independence, further reinforced gold's safe-haven appeal.

Silver Extends Selloff on Monday

Silver trimmed some of its earlier losses on Monday but was still down around 8% at $78 per ounce, as last week's profit-taking-driven selloff in precious metals continued into the new week. The white metal slipped as low as $77 during the Asian session, following Friday's steep 26% plunge, its largest one-day drop on record, which nearly erased its year-to-date gains. Silver had hit a record high above $120 on Thursday. The sharp reversal came after reports that US President Donald Trump plans to nominate Kevin Warsh as the next Federal Reserve chair, a move widely seen as signaling a more hawkish policy stance. Despite the downturn, silver has continued to find some underlying support from a structural market deficit and the so-called "debasement trade," as investors shift into physical assets from currencies and bonds amid growing concerns over rising government debt, along with geopolitical and economic uncertainties and ongoing worries about the Fed's independence.

US Natgas Prices Sink 21% as Warmer Forecasts Emerge

Commodity

US natural gas futures plummeted 21% to $3.42 per million British thermal units, erasing Friday's 11.3% surge, as near term weather forecasts shifted toward milder conditions and reduced demand expectations. Forecasts through mid month point to warmer than normal temperatures across large parts of the country, according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, which is likely to curb heating and power generation demand. This outlook offset the impact of ongoing frigid conditions in the southern US, where cold weather has prompted power saving efforts. Prices have been highly volatile in recent weeks, with the February contract surging to a three year high before expiring last Wednesday on storm related production disruptions and strong heating demand. The March contract jumped again on Friday following mixed forecasts and a bullish government storage report.
